Eugenie Sage, I support a mandatory phase-out on the sale and distribution of all single-use plastic bags. It's not an insurmountable problem as cloth and leather bags were used long before plastic was invented so it should be easy to return to change back to using them - as many people are already doing. See, eg, <https://www.facebook.com/keepdunedinbeautiful/?rc=p> Jorja Hay, a passionate Waikouaiti primary school student, is walking the talk ... Jorja's group of local women have made more than 1000 fabric bags to be ... Jorja Hay is on a mission to "save our seas" from single-use plastic bags. The phase-out must include a ban on false solutions, such as degradable (eg, oxo degradable, biodegradable and compostable) plastic. It must also include heavier weight singlet bags, lightweight boutique bags, and so called "emergency bags" of any thickness (microns). There should be no exemptions from a mandatory phase out of single use bags. The phase-out should be applied across all retailers, no matter the size and staff level of the business. This is the fairest and most comprehensive way to ensure the elimination of single use plastic bags from the waste stream. The phase-out should take effect as soon as possible (2-6 months). I agree that the benefits from implementing a mandatory phase out of single-use plastic shopping bags exceed the costs from implementing the phase out. There is no monetary value we can place on the health of our oceans, rivers and waterways and the natural services they provide humans and other species. Reasonably practicable alternatives to single-use plastic shopping bags already exist in New Zealand, such as reusable cloth bags which are already available in many retail stores. A phase-out of single-use plastic bags should be the first step in addressing plastic pollution. I also support the call by Greenpeace and others for a national strategy to tackle the global scourge of plastic pollution. Yours sincerely, Jocelyn Munro
