If New Zealand wish to continue to call ourselves clean and green and have that image portayed throughout the world then I feel it is imperitive that we follow up on that stance, and not just use it as a publicity stunt to attract tourism. Per capita NZ is one of the worst in the world for carbon emissions, this is hardly the clean green image that NZ wants to bring forward.

Its time that the people in charge of the country stop living in a fanstasy world and actually face the issues that are confronting not only NZ but the entire world. Clean rivers for swimming is a place for the Government to start and to stamp some authority and finally say enough is enough. Lets gets back to the way NZ used to be, Clean Green and Proud.

Come on John.
