To whom this may concern,

It is very important for New Zealand to show our serious concerned in dealing with climate change and if need be become leaders in the kind of actions that show commitment in dealing with the causes of the problem. We know the burning of fossil fuels increases CO2 and other detrimental gas in the atmosphere and yet we talk about promoting oil exploration. We talk about finding markets for our coal (a huge contributor to Greenhouse Gases). These choices suggest to me that as a nation we do not understand the dire consequences of this ignorant policy direction.
If we are really committed to reducing GHG then action is what is needed not procrastination. At the end of the year in Paris New Zealand should be pushing for the setting of strong emission-reduction targets. We should be leaders not waiting for others 'cos if that's the best we can do we Maya's well just sit and watch Rome burn.
